Duke Home Infusion

Duke HomeCare & Hospice

Home infusion is the administration of intravenous (through a vein) medication to patients in the convenience of their own home.

For patients, home infusion is a very cost-effective way to receive therapy because it decreases the time spent in the hospital. Small, portable pumps that deliver medication make it possible for patients to go about their daily activities. Patients receiving home infusion enjoy the satisfaction of returning to their own surroundings, resuming daily activities, taking an active role in their own care, and, when appropriate, returning to work. In fact, we are able to do home infusion at the patient's workplace to further minimize time lost from work. These activities offer significant emotional benefits that facilitate healing. A designated infusion team member will coordinate all home infusion needs with the facility discharge planner, social worker or other health care professional.

Our services

Our infusion care team is composed of a nurse, pharmacist, reimbursement representative and a patient services coordinator. We work under the direction of a patient's primary care physician. Comprehensive patient education and training occurs with a visit from our care coordinator.
